Wahyuni Susanti The programs that provide financial aid in higher education are designed to take the student out of repayment in order to give the student the best possible chances to succeed. Among the most common assistance programs are need-based grants, financial aid for alumni, and parent tuition accounts. The latter two programs are particularly prevalent at for-profit schools. For-profit schools are subject to regulations including the rigorous approval of the student for admission and documentation of required courses to make sure the education is worth the amount being charged. 3da54e8ca3
